This is a development so unusual that the explanation of K. P. Drysdale, advertising manager of the Cadillac Company, will prove of interest to those who study advertising—which means a very considerable portion of the male population of America.
"The Cadillac Company," says Mr.

'copy' were serving as models for doz-ens of other advertisers-Cadillac phraseology bobbing up serenely in every dition, wearing other suits of clothes.

"Instances have come to our notice where Cadillac advertisements have been appropriated bodily, with the excep-tion of merely substituting the name of whole paragraphs appropriate only to the Cadillac have been 'cribbed' and applied-most inappropriately-to, cars.

"Latterly, the adaptations have come too swiftly to be comfortable—the bor-rowing beginning the moment a Cadil-lac announcement appears in one publication, and before it has gone the rounds of the rest.

the emblem of my country.

Most strongly was I impressed by two facts about the great parade. First, was the unity of thought dominating this awakened world of people. The individual, his petty aims and selfish ambitions, were lost for the moment in a realization of the interest of the whole, and yet undoubtedly the whole depended absolutely upon individual thought, sentiment, and devotion.

Second. I was impressed by the ment, and devotion.

Second, I was impressed by the diversity of the marchers. Not only was every profession, trade, and station of life represented, from suppreme court justices, judges, bankprese court justices, judges, bankprese doctors authors to marching natrices feeling that he preme court justices, jugges, pages, ers, lawyers, doctors, authors, to street cleaners, bootblacks and those humbler walks of life, but descendants of radically antagonistic races marched side by side, united in the common thought. Every one in the common thought. Every one in the common destination where the European nations parade disbanded, and explained that was represented—Germany, France, no did so because the enthusiasm of the grand Russia, and Italy—even to the people had so gripped and inspending period last year. $601,175,133.61.

Were equally sincere—all marched with heads erect and shoulders thrown back, swept on by a mutual love of this, their country—the na-

est civilian parade the charging ahead as though to meet hundred and twenty-five thousand marchers, four thousand of whom were women, swept up Fifth avenue, later.

It was one of the most thrilling and dignified sights I have ever witnessed. Fifth avenue was like the great, restless ocean—a turbulent sea of waving American flags. Almost every bystander and onlooker wore the national colors in his buttonhole or on her dress, and my heart was stirred with new love for the emblem of my country.
